Thursday 22 May

TEG is delighted that our next annual Marketplace will be hosted by Tyne & Wear Archives and Museums and held at the Discovery Museum on 22 May 2014. As usual, the Marketplace will be accompanied by an exciting programme of tours and talks, starting at mid-day on Wednesday 21 May for those planning to stay overnight in the city. For details of the programme and online booking, please visit www.teg.org.uk/marketplace.

TEG Website Re-design

TEG's Executive Committee is making plans to re-design our web site with the aims of making it easier to navigate and use with mobile devices and integrating it with social media. It is intended that the new site will be launched by early 2015 – in time for TEG's thirtieth birthday!

The restructuring will place more emphasis on allowing members to interact through the site, with a proposed 'Your TEG' feature to enable a lively interchange of news, views, information and advice. In addition, our new Professional Development pages will highlight sharing experience of touring projects through blogs and reviews, as well as featuring recordings of our seminar presentations.

TEG welcomes all comments and suggestions about the website. Do you have ideas about making it more interactive, are there pages you think could be improved, or perhaps something new you'd like to see included? Please email our web site manager, Asako Yokoya at web@teg.org.uk as soon as possible so that your feedback can be noted.

Online Handbook

Alongside our website re-design, the Committee is also planning to revise TEG's online Handbook so that a new edition will be available in time for the website launch in 2015. The Handbook aims to provide practical information and advice on all aspects of touring exhibitions and is written by members for members. The Committee is currently seeking to identify new writers to bring all sections of our Handbook up-to-the-minute with the latest developments, methods and ideas. If you have expertise in a particular area that you'd be willing to pass on to other members, please put yourself forward to re-write that section of our Handbook. Also, if you feel there is currently something missing from the Handbook that could usefully be included, do let us know. In the first instance, please email membership@teg.org.uk and your message will be forwarded to our Handbook editor.

The Showstoppers Project Arts Council Strategic Touring Programme Success

A partnership of three northern galleries – 20-21 Visual Arts Centre, Scunthorpe, The Point (darts, Doncaster Community Arts) and The Civic in Barnsley – has been awarded an Arts Council Strategic Touring Programme grant of £310,408 to work together to develop two touring exhibitions for Children and Young People which will tour nationally.

The project will actively engage with children and young people and will launch with an interactive exhibition based on the work of world renowned illustrator, Nick Sharratt.

Nick's bold, simple and colourful style is instantly recognisable, appealing to children and adults alike. His books have been translated into more than a dozen languages and have won several awards.

Nick uses vibrant colours and bold patterns in his pictures, and humour is a major element in his work. His most famous collaboration is with Jacqueline Wilson, for whom he has illustrated more than 40 books, the UK sales of which now exceed 30 million.

A series of smaller satellite exhibitions to promote the main exhibition will be developed to be shown in libraries and other public spaces and storytelling kits will be produced to enable host venues and their local libraries to work together.

Throughout the course of the first exhibition, children and young people will be recruited locally at the three main venues. These young people will then work as young curators to develop the second touring exhibition with artists and designers which will be based on animation.

The project has space for one more partner venue so if you are interested in taking part in this exciting opportunity, please contact Janine Parrish for further information on 01724 297076 or email janine.parrish@northlincs.gov.uk

Exhibition case study

Britain from Above (BfA)

Anne Woodward, Archive Exhibitions Manager, English Heritage, describes the touring exhibitions launching in England, Scotland and Wales this year to mark the completion of a four-year partnership project to make the Aerofilms Collection accessible online.

Aerofilms: A History of Britain From Above

The completion of the Britain from Above project is celebrated this year by its partners English Heritage and the Royal Commissions on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland and Wales. A major publication and a series of exhibitions and activities across Britain are planned. These mark the culmination of a four-year project to conserve, digitise and catalogue the earliest aerial views from the Aerofilms Collection. By the end of 2014, 95,000 images taken by Aerofilms Ltd between 1919 and 1953 will be accessible at www.britainfromabove.org.uk

Background

Aerofilms Ltd was the world's first firm of commercial aerial photographers. Established in May 1919 its founders – Francis Lewis Wills and Claude Grahame-White – were pioneers of the air who married the fledgling technology of flight to the discipline of photography. From the very start of operations, Aerofilms took photographs of virtually every settlement and landscape that it flew over. Continuing this far-reaching programme for 80 years, its photographs provide a unique view of the development of Britain's towns, cities and landscapes throughout the twentieth century.

In 2007, the Aerofilms Collection was purchased from Blom ASA by a partnership of English Heritage and the Royal Commissions on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland and Wales. Over one million aerial images were acquired by the partners, dating from 1919 to 2006 – the largest and most historically significant collection of oblique aerial photographs held in private hands. The sheer scale of the Collection made it necessary to seek additional funding to preserve the material and make it accessible. In 2010 funding was secured from the Heritage Lottery Fund and the Foyle Foundation to establish a four-year project called Britain from Above to make the Aerofilms Collection available free of charge online.

Exhibitions

Bespoke exhibitions in England, Scotland and Wales have been organised by the partners – English Heritage and the Royal Commissions on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland and Wales. A wide range of venues have been selected including the RAF Museum at Hendon (formerly the London Aerodrome where Aerofilms Ltd was established), The Lighthouse Glasgow and Cardiff Airport. These 'country specific' exhibitions have been curated separately by the relevant project partner, although each contains agreed generic messages about the Britain from Above project. Full exhibition details can be found on the Britain from Above website.

In addition all three partners have collaborated on a small touring exhibition that is now available for TEG members to hire. The Britain from Above project has witnessed a high-level of public engagement with Aerofilms' images. Over 28,000 users have 'tagged' comments and personal stories to images on the Britain from Above website and so far 270 people have participated in 16 community engagement projects across Britain.

The partners therefore decided to devise a small inexpensive touring show in addition to our major exhibitions. The idea being that this could be shown in multiple locations across Britain at any one time without major administrative difficulties. The touring offer consists of 30 stunning Aerofilms images of which 12 are 'generic' to the project and the remaining 18 images are tailored to the country in which they are shown. For Wales bi-lingual exhibition captions and interpretation panels have also been prepared. There is also a digital slide show available that features more images from the collection with the option to add in further images specific to the venue.

The Harbour, Castle Hill and St Catherine's Rocks, Tenby, Pembrokeshire September 1929

Tenby has been a prosperous port since the Middle Ages. It became a popular resort in the 19th century when the need for better landing facilities led to the straightening and widening of the pier. This Aerofilms view shows the picturesque setting of the harbour, overlooked by Castle Hill with St Catherine's Island in the background.

Francis Lewis Wills with pilot Jerry Shaw and cinematographer Claude Friese-Greene in a DH9B biplane, July 1919

Aerofilms Ltd was established in May 1919 by Francis Lewis Wills and Claude Grahame-White. With £3,000 capital and hired aeroplanes, Aerofilms Ltd was established in a suite at the London Flying Club on the London Aerodrome at Hendon, developing glass plate negatives in an adjoining bathroom-turned-darkroom. It was a new, unique venture – untried, untested, exciting and dangerous.

Construction of the main runway at Bristol Filton Airport, Catbrain, Gloucestershire 10 April 1947

Aerofilms was commissioned to record the construction of the major runway extension at Bristol's Filton airport from start to finish. The result was a series of photographs dating from 1946 to 1949 that showed the site undergoing a transformation from a pastoral landscape of green fields – including the demolition of the hamlet of Charlton – to a transport hub of the future.
